SPRING SUMMER 2015 COLLECTION

GYMNASIUM

Gymnastics was one of the most original and authentic institutions of Greek life, flourishing during the age of Homer, maintained throughout the centuries and considered very valuable during the classical age, the era of Gods and heroes.

In the West in ancient times the “temples” of gymnastics were the gymnasia and the palaestrae: the former were located a long way from the city, whereas the latter were in the city. Vitruvius, in his treatise, provides us with a detailed description of the palaestra, so lively that we are almost able to see the various settings: the saunas, the exercise rooms, the thermal baths – everything is surrounded by a splendid garden of shady sycamore trees. Thousands of years have passed since then and conventions have changed greatly, but there is something that still binds us to the past, like eternal children yearning for life.

From the ancient times of classical Greece to today, who cannot remember being a child, running freely in the fields, chasing a kite in the wind? Doesn't such joy, which we still enjoy as adults, closely resemble what the Olympic athletes themselves experienced? Were we not also heroes like the ancient Greeks? Were we not, however young, giants of the dawning of the world? Was that not perhaps the most spontaneous, joyous and natural form of gymnastics?

Yes - we were heroes - just like those of Greek Olympics, of Roman games, of medieval jousts, of regal hunts. Or, thinking of the East, we were heroes like the Polo champions of ancient Persia or the Gods of cricket in the Asian subcontinent.

For the ancients, gymnastics was a way of life inextricably bound to religion or war. But for us, as children, it was a pure and simple joy, like a blossoming flower, an unstoppable explosion of life that could not be halted by the most fearsome or reproachful looks of our parents. And there was a time, in the modern history of the West, when the connection between childhood and sporting activity was restored in a joyous and natural environment: the oratorio (youth centre). This oratorio may actually be familiar to many of us: running breathlessly after a tattered ball in a courtyard, with a Priest who tried to make sure we behaved, perhaps as young as we were, who could not resist the temptation to roll up his cassock and often threw himself into the contest. The Vitruvian palaestra, the oratorio.

At that young age many of us shaped their body and spirit, and after all that humble sport - where winning was not as important as having fun - was as glorious as it was for the ancient Greeks.
 There is a time for every way of life. Rousseau understood that perfectly when he created Emile, the child-protagonist of his book who had been brought up according to the rules of nature.

Childhood is the most delicate and important time of life and this delightful period might always be lived according to nature if the many things we learn in childhood also include the carefreeness of running across a field.
 From ancient times to modern-day, conventions have changed but the essence has not: the well-being of body and spirit is an in-born value of human nature.

THE ETHNIC WAVE

Skilfully bringing together metropolitan elegance and atmospheres with an ethnic flair, the collection comes to life through clear and bright colours, lightly overlapping fabrics and delicate transparencies.

Precious materials and artisanal craftsmanship dissolve the threshold between the active world and refined distinction to compose a unique style that is harmoniously developed through minimal volumes.

Its rhythm is set by a modern dialogue between the genuine character of the natural elements and sophisticated re-workings of classic materials and threads.

Nonchalant and feminine, the silhouette is shaped by exotic inspirations that open up fringes worked by hand and expand the stitches of the sweaters above the glistening reflection of the fluid surfaces. Carefully studied laminate effects accompany the exquisitely summery pastel tones found throughout the fabrics and the ultra soft leatherwear. Raffia fringes, light-as-air ostrich feathers and canvas with a woven look perfectly offset the luxury of the finely perforated four seasons furs, while the ergonomic lines of the modern knitwear range are captured by precious meshes knotted by hand using the traditional macramé technique.

MEN'S COLLECTION SPRING SUMMER 2015

JOURNEY IN THE LAND OF SPICES

The Western tradition of elegance is enhanced through inspiration from distant lands and intense chromatic hints of spices. The everyday dress sense of the European capitals is blended with passion for movement and a skilful balance of classic tones meets the refined charm of colonial nuances and fruits of the earth. The modern sartorial style beckons towards voyages and discovery: the collection explores the lightness of calibrated overlapping fabrics, attention to basic details and sharp lines that enhance the male physique. The quality of the craftsmanship is combined with innovative techniques and unprecedented materials to lighten the constructions, perfect their comfort and create new exquisite elements for pairing clothing and accessories. From formal suits to refined everyday style, stimuli for new departures and chic social occasions alternate throughout the journey.
